PART V. Reading

<sup>1</sup>Almost everyone has experienced clear memories connected to smells. Smell memories are so strong that they can take us immediately to the past. You smell a certain perfume or cologne, and you are with an old love again. You smell popcorn, and you are a child in a park. We often forget an experience until we smell something which is connected to it; then we can immediately see and hear the whole experience and feel the emotions that we felt before. Therefore, we are having the experience again.

<sup>2</sup>The sense of smell is very important for animals because it helps them find food, know danger and know other members of the same species. However, when humans developed higher brain abilities, such as language, the sense of smell became less important for survival. This is why humans only have about 20 million smell receptors whereas some animals have 220 million receptors. So, why are our smell memories strong? The answer is in our physiology. We usually have strong emotional responses to smell memories because of olfactory cortex where our sense of smell lives in. This cortex is near amyglada which is the centre of emotions and memories.

<sup>3</sup>Scientists have done a research to compare smell motivation with other motivation as memory gives signal. With visual signals and word signals, people remembered things which happened after the age of 10. With smell signals, they remembered more things from their childhood. This can happen, because at the beginning, the sense of smell develops in babies.

<sup>4</sup>These researches have positive inferences for helping people who experience brain disease. If they can't remember things from their past, the memories can often be motivated with smells. Researchers have found out that when people who have memory problems smell something which is connected to their youth, they can often describe a memory in great detail.

1. Which one is an important characteristic of smell memories?
  - a. It makes you remember the past.
  - b. You remember important events.
  - c. It causes memory problems.
  - d. It helps older people to remember something.
  - e. It cures brain diseases.
